Thoughts about yesterday's inservice:

- 1) Best money the LSSD has ever spent. You could have sent us all on a cruise and we wouldn't be as excited as we all are today.
- 2) Facebook blew up last night with all the positive posts about Larry Bell and how great the inservice was...that NEVER, NEVER, NEVER happens!
- 3) I'm so excited about the classroom management portion of it, the building relationships, the expecting the best from everyone. I spoke with Mr. Bell during a break, and shared with him that this is a piece of the puzzle to "work myself out of a job" as I like to put it. My goal would be for every student to stay in their regular classroom and interact with their peers for optimal learning opportunities. In my experience, most of the behavior problems come from poor academic achievement. When, (notice I said when), our schools are 100%ers, the behavior problems will diminish considerably. Poor choices will still be made, but the constant disruptions will be few and far between.
- 4) If I may suggest something...could we have one person that we can email documents that we create, and other things we find, that can then be passed on to all staff in the district?? As Mr. Bell showed yesterday, even if a Kindergarten teacher makes something, it doesn't mean I can't tweak it and use it myself. I don't know who would want to field all of those emails, but I know none of us have access to email the entire district. Why reinvent the wheel!
- 5) The bad news is...it will be really tough for you to top that one :)
- 6) Thank you for allowing me to do a job that makes my heart happy!

Have a blessed day,
Beth
